One Hundred Dollars Reward.

RAN away from the Subscriber, on Tuesday the second of this inst. April, living in Kent county, Maryland, near Chester Town, the following described Negroes, viz. William, about 5 feet 5 or 6 inches high, a yellowish complexioned fellow, about thirty years of age, formerly the property of doctor William Matthews, he has been very much given to running away, and has been so often described in the public papers within this twelve months that any further description of him seems needless.—Jacob, about 6 feet high, and about 32 years of age, of a common Negroe complection, down look, his little finger of his left hand stands straight, occasioned by the cut of a sickle. Patt, the wife of said Jacob, about 27 years of age, a small light made woman of a yellowish complection, with thick lips for an American of her stature, she is a very good needle woman, and spins on either small or great wheel, and is very handy in any common house work.—Two children of the said Jacob's and Patt's, the one a male child about four years old, the other a female child about two years old. The above described Negroes took with them, besides their own wearing apparel, three coats, two of which were linsey cloth of a light grey color, both new; one of the two was a great deal too large for either of the said fellows; the other coat of brown cloth, half worn; three under jackets, one a velvet, another a drab, the other a light colored linsey cloth do, one new pair of Calf skin shoes, lined with linnen and bound with leather, one pair of boots remarkably large in the legs, several pairs of stockings and a silver watch, all stolen: their own wearing apparel as follows—William had on a light-horse regimental coat worked with silver twist, (which coat he had when he was brought home to me the first of February last, a round sailor jacket (blue,) thickset breeches, patched with corduroy in the stride, with other necessary clothing. Jacob, two linsey cloth coatees, lead colored, one new the other half worn, blue linsey cloth jacket, half worn, two pairs of linsey cloth trowsers, of a lead colour, the one new the other half worn, tolerable good shoes and stockings. Patt has every day cloathing, and her children wore home-made linen and linsey, her other cloathing not so well known; it is uncertain which course they may take, as William is such an experienced coaster.

Any person or persons apprehending said negroes or sounding them, so that their master may get them again, shall be entitled to the above reward, or in proportion for either of them, that is to say, 40 dollars for each of the fellows, and twenty dollars for the wench and children, and if brought home, all reasonable charges paid by

PHILADELPHIA,

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 26.

The two following paragraphs are extracted from the Vergennes (Vermont) Gazette, an excellent paper, edited by Mr. Samuel Chipman, jun.

Leroi, a Frenchman, has made an experiment that phoſphorus, internally applied, will ſurpriſingly ſtimulate a weak conſtitution, and even prolong, for a day, the life of a dying man. The intereſts of the arts and ſciences have not been neglected amidſt the atrocities of revolution and the demoralization of the republic. The experiment ſuggeſts the idea that even Sanſculottes are willing to keep off the king of terrors, and are not always eager for everlaſting ſleep.

The genius of Connecticut is deſtined ſtill to ſhine in the literary world. Dr. Benjamin Trumbull, of N. Haven, is engaged in the publication of a "Syſtematical demonſtration of the divine origin of the ſcriptures." That ſtate, eminent for its literary productions, is not yet ſufficiently depraved, or rather indoctrinated in French philoſophical principles, to reject a ſyſtem, which enjoins ſubmiſſion to government, pure morality, and ſublime piety to God.

THE LAY PREACHER.

"Truly the light is ſweet, and a pleaſant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun."

THE ſenſitive GRAY, in a frank letter to his friend WEST, aſſures him that, when the ſun grows warm enough to tempt him from the fire-ſide, he will, like all other things, be the better for his influence; for the ſun is an old friend, and an excellent nurſe, &c. This is an opinion which will be eaſily entertained by every one who has been cramped by the icy hand of Winter, and who feels the gay and renovating influence of Spring. In thoſe mournful months, when vegetables and animals are alike coerced by cold, man is tributary to the howling ſtorm and the ſullen ſky; and is, in the pathetic phraſe of JOHNSON, "a ſlave to gloom." But when the earth is diſencumbered of her load of ſnow, and warmth is felt, and twittering ſwallows are heard, he is again jocund and free. Nature renews her charter to her ſons, and rejoicing mortals in the ſtriking language of the poet, "reviſit light, and feel its ſovereign, vital lamp."—Hence is enjoyed, in the higheſt luxury,

"Day, and the ſweet approach of ev'n and morn,
And ſight of vernal bloom, and ſummer's roſe,
And flocks and herds, and human face divine."

It is nearly impoſſible for me to convey to my readers an idea of the "vernal delight" felt at this period by the Lay Preacher, far declined in the vale of years. My ſpectral figure pinched by the rude gripe of January, becomes as thin as that "dagger of lath" employed by the vaunting Falſtaff; and my mind, affected by the univerſal deſolation of Winter, is nearly as vacant of joy and bright ideas, as the foreſt is of leaves, and the grove is of ſong. Fortunately, for my happineſs, this is only periodical ſpleen. Though, in the bitter months, ſurveying my extenuated body, I exclaim with the melancholy prophet, "My leanneſs, my leanneſs, woe is me;" and though, adverting to the ſtate of my mind, I behold it "all in a robe of darkeſt grain," yet, when April and May reign in ſweet viciſſitude, I give, like Horace, care to the winds; and perceive the whole ſyſtem excited by the potent ſtimulus of ſunſhine.

An ancient bard, of the happieſt deſcriptive powers, and who noted objects not only with the eye of a poet, but with the accuracy of a philoſopher, ſays, in a ſhort poem, devoted to the praiſes of Mirth, that

"Young and old come forth to play
On a ſunſhine holiday."

In merry Spring time, not only birds, but melancholic old fellows, like myſelf, ſing. The ſun is the poet's, the invalid's, and the hypochondriac's friend. Under clement ſkies, and genial ſunſhine, not only the body is corroborated, but the mind is vivified, and the heart becomes "open as day." I may be conſidered fanciful in the aſſertion, but I am poſitive that many, who, in November, December, January, February and March, read nothing but Mandeville, Rochefoucault, and Hobbes, and cheriſh malignant thoughts at the expenſe of poor human nature, abjure their evil books and ſour theories, when a ſofter ſeaſon ſucceeds. I have in Winter, felt hoſtile to thoſe, whom I could ſmile upon in May, and claſp to my boſom in June. Our moral qualities, as well as natural objects, are affected by phyſical laws; and I can eaſily conceive that benevolence, no leſs than the ſun-flower, flouriſhes and expands under the luminary of day.

With unaffected earneſtneſs, I hope that none of my readers will look upon the agreeable viſitation of the ſun, at this beauteous ſeaſon, as the impertinent call of a crabbed monitor, or an importunate dun. I hope that none will churliſhly tell him "how they hate his beams." I am credibly informed that ſeveral of my city friends, many fine ladies, and the worſhipful ſociety of loungers conſider the early call of the above red faced perſonage, as downright intruſion. It muſt be confeſſed that he is fond of prying into chambers and cloſets, but not, like a rude ſearcher, or libertine gallant, for injurious or licentious purpoſes. His deſigns are benificent, and he is one of the warmeſt friends in the world. Notwithſtanding his looks are ſometimes a little ſuſpicious, and he preſents himſelf with the fiery eye and fluſhed cheek of a jolly toper, yet this is only a new proof of the fallacy of phyſiognomy, for he is the moſt regular being in the univerſe.—He keeps admirable hours, and is ſteady, diligent, and punctual to a proverb. Conſcious of his ſhining merit, and dazzled by his regal glory, I muſt rigidly inhibit all from attempting to exclude his perſon. I caution ſluggards to abſtain from the uſe of ſhutters, curtains, and all other villainous modes of inſulting my ardent friend. My little garden, my only ſupport, and myſelf, are equally the objects of his care; and were it not for the conſtant loan of his great lamp I could not always ſee to write

COMMUNICATION.

M'KEAN.

To the Citizens of Philadelphia.

THE Democratic Committee appointed to circulate the intelligence of Thomas M'Kean's being ſelected to fill the office of Chief Executive Magiſtrate of Pennſylvania, after pompouſly enumerating his "perſonal merits and public ſervices", have aſſerted a falſehood which ought not to go uncontradicted. They ſay he has been governor of a ſiſter ſtate, meaning I ſuppoſe the ſtate of Delaware, for of any other ſtate, no one I preſume will aſſert that he ever was governor. Now the fact is ſimply this. In the month of January, 1777, John M'Kinly, Eſq. then ſpeaker of the houſe of aſſembly of the ſtate of Delaware, was by both houſes of the general aſſembly, elected preſident of the ſtate, agreeable to the then conſtitution. This event rendered the ſpeaker's chair vacant, upon which Thomas M'Kean, then a member, was by the houſe choſen ſpeaker, in which he continued until the termination of the ſeſſion, which took place in two or three days after. In the month of September, 1777, the Britiſh army paſſed through the ſtate of Delaware—a detachment of it took poſſeſſion of Wilmington, at which place Mr. M'Kinley, the preſident, became a priſoner of war: by the capture of whom, the powers of government devolved on George Read, Eſq. ſpeaker of the council, but he being at that time abſent in New-Jerſey, they then devolved on Thomas M'Kean, as ſpeaker of the aſſembly, who exerciſed them until the return of Mr. Read, which was in a few days. So that by the capture of Preſident M'Kinley, and the accidental abſence of the ſpeaker of the council, Thomas M'Kean exerciſed the powers of government for a few days. Hence it is, that this committee induce the people of Pennſylvania to believe, that he has been elected governor of a ſiſter ſtate, and thereby endeavor to procure their ſuffrages for his election to the ſame important office in Pennſylvania. To what miſerable ſhifts, to what democratic tricks, nay to what palpable deception are theſe people driven, in order to accompliſh their purpoſes. Be on your guard, therefore, my fellow-citizens, againſt their deceptive wiles. Thomas M'Kean never was elected governor of the ſtate of Delaware, and I truſt your good ſenſe, patriotiſm, and truly republican principles, will prevent his being elected governor of the ſtate of Pennſylvania.

PLAIN TRUTH.

Philadelphia, April 22d, 1799.

From the Virginia Gazette.

MR. DAVIS,

I FIND, by your paper of the 7th inſtant, which I got a few days ſince, Mr. Giles has, at laſt, condeſcended to deny what he is pleaſed to call a charge againſt him in yours of the 25th of January laſt; and to invalidate the teſtimony of Mr. Burwell, he ſays, "The converſation is preſumed to have happened on the 22d ult. at the houſe of a perſon in Richmond, generally called 'Little Lewi Burwell;' but from his adherence to the Britiſh cauſe during the revolutionary war, &c. has obtained the name of 'Little England." Mr. Burwell, to diſtinguiſh him from three other gentlemen of the ſame name, has been called Engliſh Lewi Burwell, from having ſpent the early part of his life in that country, and by his intimate acquaintances has been called Little Burwell; but, I believe Mr. Giles muſt have the credit of naming him 'Little England,' which I never before heard of; and, in whatever light he may attempt to place him, I am perſuaded, where they are equally known, Mr. Burwell's aſſertion will always gain as much credit as Mr. Giles's.

I ſhould have paid no attention to Mr. Giles's letter to you, but for one part of it.

He tells you, "In Mr. Nelſon's conduct there are circumſtances of a very extraordinary nature. He heard of this expreſſion the evening preceeding the 24th of January, which was on Monday. On Tueſday he wrote his letter of alarm for the next day's paper. I was in Richmond on Monday, on Tueſday, and on Wedneſday until after 12 o'clock. On Tueſday an intereſting debate took place in the Houſe of Delegates reſpecting the affairs of the Union, in which I bore a part." Mr. Giles is correct in ſaying I heard of this expreſſion the evening preceeding the 24th of January, but he is miſtaken as to the day of the week; for the evening preceeding the 24th was on Wedneſday; ſo that, had I been inclined to his mode of explanation, it would have been impracticable; both the debate, and his leaving town, having happened before I heard a ſentence of the expreſſion. The intereſting debate alluded to by Mr. Giles, I ſuppoſe, was on the ſubject of the addreſs to the people, which took place on Tueſday the 22d of January. Had Mr. Giles and his party told the people, in plain terms, that diſunion was their object, but little, if any, miſchief could have flowed from the meaſure—common ſenſe would have been a ſufficient corrective; but when they come forward in the true jacobin ſtile, to create a diſguſt againſt the preſent government, and thereby effect a change, without avowing the intention, it becomes, in my opinion, the firſt duty of every friend of real liberty to counteract the inſidious poiſon.

Your humble ſervant,

J. NELSON.

By this Promotion the three Colonelcies of Marines became vacant, which have been refilled by the following Officers:— Sir George Fairfax, Sir James Saumarez, and Captain Thornborough.

By this large and liberal Promotion, fifteen Poſt-Ships become vacant, which will be filled by Poſt Captains now unemployed, or Promotions from the inferior ranks.

The treaſure and jewels which the King of Naples carried away with him from Naples are to a very large amount. For five nights before the departure of the Royal Family, confidential ſervants were employed in removing it from the Palace to the houſe of Sir William Hamilton, from whence it was embarked in the boats, belonging to the Britiſh Squadron. The Royal Family, likewiſe embarked from the Arſenal, in the boats belonging to the Vanguard.

The following Extract from a Voyage to the South Seas, lately publiſhed by Captain Colnett, of the Royal Navy, is highly deſerving of the attention of all Commanders of Ships and others who go into hot climates as it exhibits a ſucceſsful mode of treating the Yellow Fever, a diſorder, which, alas! has ſo often baffled the ſkill of medical practitioners (page 80):

"The whole crew had been more or leſs affected by the Yellow Fever, from which horrid diſorder I was however ſo fortunate as to recover them, by adopting the method that I ſaw practiſed by the Natives of Spaniſh America, when I was a priſoner among them. On the firſt ſymptoms appearing, the fore part of the head was immediately ſhaved, and temples and poll waſhed with vinegar and water. The whole body was then immerſed in warm water, to give a free courſe to perſpiration: ſome opening medicine was afterwards adminiſtered and every four hours a doſe of ten grains of James's powders,

If the patient was thirſty, the drink was weak white wine and water, and a ſlice of bread to ſatisfy an inclination to eat. An increaſing appetite was gratified by a ſmall quantity of ſoup, made from the mucilaginous part of the turtle, with a little vinegar in it. I alſo gave the ſick ſweetmeats and other articles from my private ſtock, whenever they expreſſed a diſtant wiſh for any, which I could ſupply them with.

By this mode of treatment, the whole crew improved in their health, except the carpenter, who though a very ſtout robuſt man, was at one time in ſuch a ſtate of delirium, and ſo much reduced, that I gave him over; but he at length recovered."

A more judicious treatment of this diſorder could not have been deviſed. The ſame good ſenſe, indeed, which directed the medical concerns (for there was no ſurgeon on board) ſeems to have prevailed upon every occaſion of difficulty or danger, which required nautical ſkill; but of this we are the leſs ſurpriſed, when we find that captain Colnett had ſerved under that celebrated navigator captain Cook; to whoſe works this publication will no doubt be conſidered as a valuable ſupplement.

By the late arrivals from the Havanna we learn, that some time in the latter end of March, the ship Ocean, of New-York, mounting 22 guns, and manned with 83 men was captured after a bloody engagement, by three French privateers; one a schooner, formerly a Providence privateer, mounting 16 guns; the others, schooners, carrying 10 and 8 guns: they carried her by boarding. The account received in the Havanna, which was generally credited, said that 78 men of the Ocean's crew were killed. She was from New-York, bound to the Havanna, with a very valuable cargo on board, belonging to Mr. Cramond of New-York. Sunday morning arrived at Dover a cartel from Gravelines, with prisoners; but no French papers were suffered to be put on board. The cartel sailed again in the evening for France.

By the prisoners who came over in the cartel, some of whom are officers, who had read the Paris papers in France, we learn that it was generally underdood that a renewal of the war with the Emperor was decided.

In consequence the Directory had ordered a new military conscription of three hundred thousand men to be levied for attacking Germany, and it is said that every man of the age of between 20 and 30 is to be sent to the armies, except those whose situations affords them particular protection. PHILADELPHIA,

FRIDAY EVENING, APRIL 26.

IF Republics have been scourged in a peculiar degree, by the turbulence of faction, and the field it naturally opens to unprincipled ambition, they have also, in all other times but our own, been distinguished by many splendid attributes, seldom found to exist to so high a degree, under any other form. Amongst these, no one has unveiled a brighter scene of glory, or tended more to establish their empire and renown, than that high souled jealousy and pride, which instinctively scorns at interferences with their proper sovereignty and predominance. Doomed, as republics, from their nature must be, to the unending afflictions of division and discord, to envy, jealousy and revenge, and every other passion in its degree, to which their loosened restraint gives range, some counteraction seems extremely essential; and a little reflection will evince, that none can be substituted for this uncompromising jealousy of the national honor.

To create new factions, or to array under its auspices against their government, those already existing, has been the common prelude to hostilities against Republics, on the part of their enemies in every age. Their centinels thus stationed, and their train laid, they draw on the sequel as occasion suits, while in the interval left by the supineness of the former, no artifice of demagogy, no exertion of interested devotees is relaxed, in the great work of increasing and fortifying their partisans. To strike, and quickly too, is obviously the sole means of warding off the thousand mischiefs and dangers from this source, which from their nature, can never be distinctly known, and if account is made to meet them distinctly, must baffle calculation, and defeat opposition.

In this painful posture do we at this instant stand; our government arraigned by the French rulers, at the tool and dupe of England, and treacherous to the people; and the people, while they are flattered as eminently virtuous and pure, murdered by Constitutional Decrees, without distinction and without remorse. No civilized nation ever perpetrated the enormities we have endured from the French; and no independent people ever so tamely endured them. Meanwhile, (confounding truth!) their influence here is increasing and extending, and the reflection seems to strike no one, that on every step which it advances, depend not merely the conquest and subjugation, but the ruin of thousands, the desolation, misery and despair of thousands, the murder of thousands.

The allotted period of our salvation is protracted almost to its latest verge; and the proposed negociation, if suffered to be prolonged like the last, may yet inscribe on the blood-stained Tablet of Diplomatic Skill, the post obiit of our Independence. The interval between the present time and the issue of the proposed negociation, should, therefore, be a busy one: over that measure we have no longer any controul—it is constitutionally committed; but, therefore, have we the more important part to act; and conscious of the dangers to which it may expose us, we should proceed, (regardless of the clamors of the mercenary miscreants* who surround us) to point them out, that they may be provided for, and avoided.

The French republic, more than any that has preceded her, possesses this contumacious and inveterate remembrance of an injury offered to her pride, and adds to it, a more insatiable thirst for conquest, than ever animated Alexander, or her own great Monarque. Since she first became distracted by the whimsies of her fantastic philosophy, she has in no instance, forgotten or forgiven an injury. One Basseville, a low and insolent sansculotte, whom she had sent, at an early stage of the revolution to outrage his holiness, the pope, was, for some of his democratic gambols, murdered by the populace: though ample atonement was made, and the breach acknowledged to be healed, this occurrence is made a pretence, at the distance of eight years, for the seizure and plunder of the Roman commonwealth; the anarchizing of its inhabitants, the destruction of its government, and the exile or murder of its members. Of Switzerland the unatoneable crime was to have failed in making common cause with her; for on Switzerland she had claims of gratitude, and consequently, was not satisfied that she should merely keep aloof from the struggle, or even that she should secretly and partially aid and assist—Her laches in the glorious career of revolutionizing the world, was never forgiven, 'till Switzerland swarmed with revolutionary cut-throats, and her cottages smoked in ruins. Such is our crime; such the atonement she is bent on making us undergo. To work a conviction of this truth, one would think alone necessary to rouse us to a proper sense of our situation; and yet one would also think that evidences enough had already been afforded of its existence to convince the most sceptical. It is not, to be sure, to citizen Pichon, the correspondent of American traitors, that we are to look for these evidences—it is not to citizen Talleyrand we are to look for them—nor to our own Democrats; it is not very wise to look to men for a display of truth which must blast them. In the persevering hostility of France against the commerce of this country, in her unrelenting spirit of resentment so repeatedly displayed, at the repudiation of Genet, and the treaty with England, in her oppressions, cruelties, tortures and murders exercised upon our seamen, may we read a blind and brutal resolution taken to revenge upon us those partial indications of resentment at her insolence, which however just and however honorable, must thus prove fatal, if not followed up by the same spirit which gave rise to them.

And yet, "sunt qui formidine nullâ imbuti spectent." There are men who view this as a common case, to be relieved by ordinary means. With them, the demand of tribute, is construed into anxiety for the preservation of peace, and the massacre of a whole ship's crew, passes for the symptom of an indication of hostility! Compared with the fate she prepares for us, it is, in truth, no more. Her store of heaviest horrors will be exhausted on our heads; and all that annalists have written of the cruelties of Herod and of Nero, or Poets fabled of the torments of the damned, will be our wretched lot. The all-blasting Upas of France, once allowed to take root on our shores, and her infernal tri-color must soon float over our miserable land, then become an ocean of blood.

The Northampton Insurrection, commenced in deceit and wickedness, has at length ended in a complete display of madness, delusion and folly. The mischiefs of this assumption of sovereignty on the part of a handful of fools and knaves, have already had their full operation: and it now remains that we benefit ourselves by those lessons to be drawn from the occasion, which, left unimproved to further ends, the Insurrection might as well have been permitted to rage. Such is the nature of the age in which our lot is cast, that no event that emerges, however apparently simple in its aspect, ought to be viewed in an unconnected light; but while the mind is kept continually involved in one turbid whirlpool, while we are driven from outrage to outrage, and from insurrection to insurrection; from the hostilities of Genet, to the treason of the Flour Merchants, and from Diplomatic Skill, to the moody Rebellion of the Land of Slaves;—there is danger that by dwelling too intensely on separate points, we neglect to trace up the origin and connection of the various evils by which we have been scourged, to their true source. To effect a radical cure of the disease "whereof our power is sick," it is necessary to discover and operate upon the cause: It is effecting but a partial purpose, to put down the insurrection of a few counties, whilst a band of French mercenaries dispersed over the commonwealth are preparing an Insurrection of the whole state, under the auspices of a thorough-going French Revolutionist, who would soon league poor Pennsylvania with the land of slaves in her holy work of dismembering the Union, and soon deliver us over, bound hand and foot, to the dominion of the Directory. There is but one remedy now left, which can reach the evil.

Amongst the first good effects of the encreasing glow of Federalism, in Franklin county, has been the decampment from Chambersburg of two filthy democratic printers.

Extract of a letter from Boston, April 18.

"The Damon of Jacobinism has taken deeper hold of the good people of this state in the course of the last year, than is for the health of the body politic. Misrepresentations without number have been propagated and believed. Poor devils, who never were and never will be worth a farthing, conceit (because they have been told so) that they shall have thousands to pay for the support of government."

Extract of a letter from Cincinnati to a gentleman in authority, dated April 10.

"A Mr. M'Rea arrived here last evening from the Natches; he was employed as an express by Abijah Hunt to bring a large quantity of bills of exchange from that place to this; and having advanced from the Natches as far as the river Tennassee, was there encaped on the 19th March last, with four other travellers, when, about midnight, five armed Indians seized and tied Mr. M'Rea and two of his fellow travellers: in the mean time the other two escaped and fled from the camp. The Indians after having led their captives out and fastened them to taees, packed up every single article belonging to them, saddled and loaded their valuable horses, and mounted and rode off—after having gone a small distance, the Indians sent back one of their party with a small piece of bacon and a few handfulls of Indian meal, who gave it to the captives, then untied them and rode off. Mr. M'Rea and the other two built a raft and descended the river Tennassee, and in four days arrived at Massac, from whence he reached this place on foot last evening. Being robbed of all letters as well as bills, Mr. M'Rea can give no description of the bills, but says that the amount is about 20,000 dollars. These bills have been collected at the Natches by Mr. Abijah Hunt, and are probably composed of Guion's bills on the Secretary of War, for the pay of the army—of Mr. Hanigan's bills on James O'Hara or William Bell of Philadelphia—of Mr. Ellicott's bills on the Treasury of the United States, and of bills drawn by or upon John Wilkins, the quarter-master general: and as they have been in circulation at Natches, there is a probability that they are indorsed in blank, so as to be current and demandable by the bearer. This is all the information that at present we are possessed of; but it is highly probable that in a few days Mr. Jesse Hunt, of this place, to whom the lost bills were addressed, will receive duplicates, and such further information from Natches, as will enable him to furnish more complete information towards detection and stoppage of payment."

Extract of a letter from Gibraltar, dated January 22d, 1799.

"The King of Naples, on the 22d ult. was deserted by 17 regiments, officers and men, on sight of a very inferior French army, which obliged gen. Mack to make the best retreat he could, and the king and his family to embark on board Nelson's ship for Sicily, where he arrived; and it is said, the French entered Naples. This puts us under some apprehension about Leghorn; in short, it seems the war begins a new. Tobacco still very dull; in the Bay from 13 to 15 dollars per cwt. (it is not allowed to be landed unless from England) Sugar, Coffee and Cocoa at a stand, the importation of it into Spain, from this place, being prohibited, and speculations for Italy dropped. Havanna Sugars, two thirds white, lately sold at 22 dollars per cwt. four months credit. Coffee 33 cents per lb.—Nankeens 150 cents per piece.——Mahon is in possession of the English."
